FoodChoices® curriculum resource (Xyris Software, 2009)

This fully online curriculum resource has been developed for secondary schools and is designed to encourage students to make healthy food choices. A practical tool for students studying food and nutrition, this resource comprises of Food Choices® nutrient analysis software, 16 student challenges and 69 supporting full-colour resource sheets and resources for learning how to use Food Choices® in the classroom. The software now includes the latest Nutrient Reference Values and can be accessed by teachers and students from their home computers.

Nutrition—The inside story 2nd edition (Home Economics Institute of Australia 2008)

This beautifully illustrated, full-colour food and nutrition textbook is sure to engage both students and the health conscious reader. Nutrition—The inside story also considers the wider issues related to food and nutrition such as the influence of the food industry, and the impact of our eating behaviours on environmental sustainability, with a completely new chapter 'Sustainable food futures'.

Totally gorgeous textiles (Home Economics Institute of Australia, 2008) — posters

Each poster is 840mm x 297mm and celluglazed for protection.

Collection one: The colours of culture is a set of six posters of traditional dress in six different cultures that capture the totally gorgeous richness and vibrancy of cultural dress. Whilst chosen to illustrate the diversity and beauty of global textiles, they equally tell many stories about cultural diversity.

Collection two: Touching textiles is a set of images to inspire the love of textiles for their tactile beauty. The collection of six posters shows fabrics of different colours and textures at close range so that you can almost feel their sumptuous gorgeousness.

Ancient grains (Saxelby, 2013)

Ancient grains have recently been discovered in Western society. These 'old' grains have been grown by different communities the world over as they began settling in one place and forsaking the nomadic life. These include quinoa, chia, amaranth, millet, wild rice and ancient forms of wheat such as spelt. Most ancient grains have a delicious chewy texture, are grown in an eco-friendly way and many provide useful grain alternatives for those searching for gluten free and/or wheat-free items. Often described as 'super grains', ancient grains offer us much in the way of natural nutrition and positive health benefits. This very up-to-date book gives excellent information on 23 different types of grains, followed by modern recipes where the grains can be used. This very up-to-date book gives excellent information on 23 different types of grains followed by modern recipes where the grains can be used.

Life from the inside: Perspectives on social sustainability and interior architecture (Smith, Lommerse & Metcalfe, 2011)

Environments that people inhabit and experience have the power to enhance the wellbeing of individuals and their communities. Life from the Inside promotes discussion on the potential of interior architecture to improve and extend the quality of life through the design of our built environments. The editors position the debate through three lenses—community engagement, social justice and cultural heritage.

'The book helps people to understand how interior architecture can educate the community on issues of social sustainability,' Associate Professor Smith said. 'It is a potential catalyst for change that brings people in this area together and encourages others to think about how they can create sustainable environments within their community.'

Childhood obesity prevention: International research, controversies and interventions (O'Dea & Eriksen [Eds], 2010)

Obesity is a complex issue that is now an international public health concern. The articles in this book support its complexity and confirm there is no easy solution. This book combines health education theory, research and practice to guide teachers, health workers and practitioners in the prevention of childhood obesity and the promotion of child and adolescent health and wellbeing. The international chapters examine the importance of factors such as social class and ethnic differences. Global and local trends are identified. This book has a positive approach and is an excellent resource to develop critical thinking.

Over the counter (Queensland Association of School Tuckshops, 2008)

This resource is divided into sections from snacks to sandwiches, wraps and rolls, light meals, salads and hot meals and is set out very clearly with appealing photos. This collection of recipes showing ingredients for 15, 30 and 60 serves is ideal for canteens, classrooms and camp cooking.

Sustainable fashion and textiles: Design journeys, 2nd edition (Fletcher, 2014)

Fully revised and updated, the second edition of Sustainable fashion and textiles: Design journeys continues to define the field of design in fashion and textiles. Arranged in two sections, the first four chapters represent key stages of the lifecycle: material cultivation/extraction, production, use and disposal. The remaining four chapters explore design approaches for altering the scale and nature of consumption, including service design, localism, speed and user involvement. While each chapter is complete in and of itself, their real value comes from what they represent together: innovative ways of thinking about textiles and garments based on sustainability values and an interconnected approach to design. The second edition includes a new preface, updated content and a new conclusion reflecting and critiquing developments in the field, as well as discussing future developments.

The atlas of food—Who eats what, where and why, 2nd edition (Millstone & Lang, 2008)

This award-winning atlas maps every link of the food chain, from farming, production and retail to the food on our plates. It also investigates how, in an era of new technologies, globalised food trade and even plentiful supply, millions remain hungry. Topics include: price and shortages; malnutrition; dietary changes and increasing obesity; climate change impacts; industrial farming; GM crops; and trade justice.

Deadly tucker (Government of Western Australia, Department of Health Department, 2008)

This book was produced as part of FOODcents for the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander People in WA Program. It contains a selection of 39 low-cost, easy-to-prepare recipes. Each recipe has step-by-step photographs in full colour, making it a suitable resource for low literacy students and for students where English is not their primary language. 'Deadly' means – very good tops, cool!!!

More Deadly Tucker (Government of Western Australia, Department of Health Department, 2013)

'More Deadly Tucker' is a follow up of 'Deadly Tucker'. This book was produced in response to feedback from over 100 Aboriginal people in Western Australia. It contains a selection of 40 easy-to-prepare recipes divided into soups, mains, salads and snacks/ desserts. In addition to the recipes, there are sections on making better food choices, standard serves, tips for convenient cooking, budgeting tips, keeping food safe and ten tips to help keep the body healthy. Like the original Deadly Tucker recipe book, each recipe has step-by-step photographs in full colour, making it a suitable resource for late primary and middle school students, low literacy students and for students where English is not their primary language.

Canteen cuisine cookbook (Western Australia School Canteen Association, 2005)

The food ideas and recipes presented in this book have been collated from students, canteen managers and schools from around Western Australia. Guidelines for the ideas submitted had to meet the set nutrient criteria. Recipes yield 10, 25 or 50 serves, catering for school canteens large and small. Many of the food ideas and recipes are equally suitable to served at home and have been chosen for their ease of preparation and simplicity of ingredients

Food safety matters (State of Queensland, Department of Health)

This resource is for use in schools, industry in the promotion of food safety. The resource promotes six simple messages that are accepted nationally as key messages for Australian food safety campaigns. The complete kit comprises a teacher resource book with black-line masters, seven posters, twenty six student booklets, a video and DVD version of the video.
